Amanda Pulido represents clients in civil rights and tort matters, complex commercial disputes, appellate proceedings, constitutional challenges, and governmental actions.

Before joining the firm, Amanda served as a judicial law clerk to U.S. District Judge Beth Bloom of the Southern District of Florida and previously worked as a Central Staff Attorney at Florida's Third District Court of Appeal. She also served as a Certified Legal Intern for the Miami-Dade Public Defender's Office. In these roles, Amanda gained experience with complex federal and state law issues, drafting proposed orders and recommendations for the court on civil and criminal matters.

Amanda earned her Juris Doctor from Florida International University College of Law. While in law school, she served as Executive Articles Editor of the FIU Law Review, was a member of the Board of Appellate Advocates, and earned the CALI Award for Excellence in Civil Rights. She holds a Bachelor of Arts in Political Science from the University of Florida.
